A correspondent of the Los Angeles Mining Review says: The Quartette Mining Company of Searchlight, Lincoln county, Nevada, has been building a twenty-stamp mill under peculiar conditions. It is being built on a lateral moraine with gravel and boulders on top and quicksand underneath, and making a success of it, too. When they started in first everything went smoothly while building the lower wall, but when they had to penetrate the bank the mischief commenced. Of course they were badly handicapped for want of timber and more so by want of knowledge of that sort of work. They started in with scrapers to tear down the hill and they would be scraping yet if they had not been stopped. Some one had sense enough to see they were driving the wrong end of the wedge, and stopped the work to commence again under the management of Mr. T. E. Thompson, who made a success of it from the start. The way he performed the work was as follows: He had the ground well soaked with water having a couple of men pumping all the time into the trenches and holes dug in the side of the bank, while other men keep driving long drills down in the bottom of the hole thus forcing the water down as far as possible. Then he ran in tunnels which had to be lagged close sides and top and the face breast-boarded. There were a few caves at first, owing to the men trying to do too much or letting the ground get dry. These tunnels were run in as far back as where the next wall was to be built, when they turned and crosscut. In this crosscut the formation and part of the wall was built, the cross tunnel being filled with rock. Then the top of that was stripped and breast-boarded back and the wall completed, and so with the other walls. And all this was done by a man who does not claim to be an engineer, just a plain, common-sense miner. The mill is about thirteen miles from Searchlight.

Since my return to the Old Woman's Mountain district I notice some improvements made. A company, working ten men, has bonded the Silver Wave mine. This property is looking fine, with every prospect of its being a big producer in the near future.

The republican orators are not saying much about the "full dinner pail" in the mining regions of Pennsylvania.
